THANKSGIVING DAY ABOARD OLD CRAFT

Few Yankee Sailors to Celebrate the Day as Ships Run
Now.

The cooks of vessels along the waterfront will be preparing Thanksgiving dinners for the sailors today, but it is doubtful if many sailors will partake of them. The "bust me back-halyards" man, when in port, prefers a restaurant dinner every time to anything that the cook can prepare aboard ship.

"I can remember the time," said an old sailor, "when Thanksgiving day used to amount to something on a Yankee saller. But those days are gone. We had Americans—real live Yanks—aboard ship then. They were mostly Downeasters. On Thanksgiving day all the men had a ripping good dinner, got a lot of fine tobacco from the skipper, and could usually count on a pint or two of rum, and if a little noise came from the fore'sle nothing was said about it as long as the men on watch were capable of working the ship. We used to hear some fine yarns in the dog-hole on that day. The sailor who had never been more than a hundred yards away from his ship would give us a glowing account of how he killed a hundred wild turkeys down in Maine in one day and when somebody got fresh and asked him what bar he was in we let 'em go on deck and scrap it out. The ghost tales that our grandfathers used to tell were told again in such marvelous ways that the men on the lookout would frequently, at a late hour, be scared to death. On one ship I remember hearing on Thanksgiving night, a gale was on too, the bell go-oo-oo. The mate came forward and wanted to know what was the matter.

"Ten thousand goblins on our star-board bow, sir."

"There was considerable society words going for about ten minutes and then I heard that sleepy landlubber shouting: 'Mary, be dead, but this is an early hour at which to wake a hard working feller like me.'

Well, our mate was a good hearted fellow, and he put another man on the lookout and took the 'hard working fellow' aft to give him a snatch of brandy and brace him up.

"But the funniest Thanksgiving night I ever went through aboard a ship was aboard an American going around the Horn. We had a cook whom everyone hated. He was no good, and his cooking was worse, so some one of the lads went to him and told him that if mince pies like mother used to make were not forthcoming on Thanksgiving day there'd be trouble. The cook was a bit scared and we were a bit surprised when, on Thanksgiving morn we were served with 'mince pies,' not the real thing, but pictures of them that the cook had cut out of some old magazines that he had found in the cabin. The boys thought awhile, and finally went to the galley and captured the insulter of New England. We bound the beggar, hand and foot, and took him down below where we kept him while the boys went to the galley to fix up a real mince pie. Dough, beans, turnips, bits of rope, tarred cord, baking powder, pepper, and many more things went into a big dish, and when they came out of the oven again they were in the condition of about the best paving brick I ever saw. Well, we took this down, and the cook was given the option of drinking four quarts of salt water containing one teaspoonful of soda, or eating two square inches of our newly made mince pie. The cook took the pie. We thought it a big joke, but the cook got so sick that he couldn't work and for forty-four days the crew took turns in cooking. It was the worst punishment that man ever got, for for forty-four days, regular three times a day, mince pies of the kind we made for the cook were dished up to everybody, for that was the nearest approach any one of us could come to making a decent dish of food.

"But those happy days have gone by. Dutchmen now fill all the bunks aboard ship, and—come over the way, stranger, and see if we can get a couple of mugs of Boston musty ale, I'll—"

But the stranger was gone.

Tobey Off for San Francisco.

The bark Gerard C. Tobey was towed out to sea shortly after 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon for a voyage to San Francisco. The vessel took a cargo of fifteen thousand bags of sugar.

Echo on the Rocks.

During a squall at Knappton, the barkentine Echo, recently at Honolulu, dragged her anchors and went on the rocks, but was hauled off by a tug and was not badly damaged.

SALT WATER IS USED FOR BALLAST

Marion Chilcott is an In-expensive
Carrier of Fuel
O.I.

The oil carrying ship Marion Chilcott has not had very good luck in discharging her first cargo of fuel oil at this port. First, the pipe line broke down, and after this was repaired her big gasoline pumping plant also played out and she had to finish the work of discharging with her steam pump. She will probably be discharged in time to get away for San Francisco on Friday.

Standing alongside of the Marion Chilcott one hears no busy noise from gangs of longshoremen working cargo, for there are none. All one sees is a ten inch hose, bound round with ropes, leading from the deck of the vessel to the big pipe under the wharf. This hose is as solid as a piece of timber, as the oil cargo of the vessel is being forced through it and for a distance of about a half mile to the oil tanks at Iwilei. At the latter point another pump is assisting in the work of forcing the oil into the big tanks. One goes aboard the vessel and finds one man at work in her engine room. He is in charge of the pumps. He is disappointed because of the breakdown of the big pump, but says that the smaller one will take the oil out in a lively manner.

"No, we don't have to buy ballast. We do not pay any longshoremen to put the ballast into our hold, and we have no gang down below trimming ballast, for the ballast we carry trims itself. When we wish to take ballast preparatory to sailing back to the Coast we simply dump the big hose you see yonder over the side and this pump will take enough water out of your harbor to keep this vessel steady during her return trip to the Coast. We will fill four of our twelve tanks with salt water and that is sufficient ballast. This, of course, is a very inexpensive proceeding."

Sailors on the Marion Chilcott say she is a very "wet boat." By this they mean that during the greater portion of the trip from San Francisco her main deck was completely under water.

"There will be a big fleet of these vessels running here soon," said a shipping man yesterday, "but an 'oil carrier' leaves but little money in the port. She has practically no discharging expenses, and her sailors, having but a couple of days to remain here, certainly do not spend much money."

Zealandia Off for Coast

Berger's Territorial band played "Auld Lang Syne" with a vengeance yesterday. He was playing off his old time friend, the steamer Zealandia, but the Zealandia did not have the crowds that formerly watched the coming and going of that vessel. She had but four cabin passengers, although there were seventy-five in her steerage.

The Zealandia got away promptly on time with a good cargo consisting of sugar, coffee, bananas, and general goods. She was loaded deep aft, but not very deep forward, and it is said that as she can make better speed under these conditions she may make a quick trip to San Francisco.

Billie Due in December.

Instead of being overdue, the bark Billie really has another month to stay at sea without making her agents here anxious for her. The vessel is out about 160 days from Hamburg, but it seems that after leaving the German port she went to Leith to finish loading and did not leave the latter port until July 5, so that her agents do not expect to see her before December 1, and possibly much later, in case she has had a rough passage.
